Ohio State Parks offer lots of ways to explore the past. Reach out and touch it.

Many state parks are home to restored historic structures, like pioneer villages and grist mills, as well as remnants of authentic pieces of history, like the Ohio & Erie and Miami & Erie canal systems. A number of fascinating historic sites operated by the Ohio Historical Society are located near state parks. Check the Ohio Historical Society website at www.ohiohistory.org for information on hours, fees and directions to historic sites.

Stand on the very spot. Interpretive signs, historic markers and monuments at several state parks mark the spot where significant events occurred.

Experience it yourself. Heritage events are held at a number of state parks every season of the year. Check the Ohio State Parks Calendar of Events for dates, locations and details. The Calendar of Events is available in the Ohio State Parks magazine and on our website at www.ohiostateparks.org.

Read all about it. Many of the feature articles in Ohio State Parks magazine weave the true tales of characters and events of Ohio’s past through the landscapes of our state parks. See our website, www.ohiostateparks.org, for the current issue of the magazine, as well as an archive of all of the past issues.

Lots of history happened here!
Ohio State Parks encompass more than 174,000 acres of Ohio’s finest natural landscapes. Because these areas have remained largely undeveloped, much of Ohio’s history has been preserved here.

Come see for yourself. Bring your imagination, and we’ll bring history to life with tours of historic structures, interpretive programs, nature center exhibits, demonstrations of frontier life and reenactments of historic events. Our state parks offer a variety of heritage-themed events year-round celebrating Ohio’s rich history. Tales of these places, events and colorful characters from Ohio’s past are also told in the Ohio State Parks magazine, which is available on-line on our website, www.ohiostateparks.org.

A Solid Foundation
There’s plenty of evidence of Ohio’s prehistoric past saved in stone. Exposed fossil beds at several state parks are studded with the remains of primitive plants and creatures that thrived when Ohio was covered by a shallow inland sea during the Paleozoic Era, more than 500 million years ago.

Glaciers carved Lake Erie and the other Great Lakes, and shaped nearly two-thirds of Ohio’s landscape as they crept forward from Canada until the end of the last Ice Age about 12,000 years ago. As the glaciers retreated, they left interesting landforms in their tracks, such as glacial grooves gouged into the limestone bedrock by granite boulders.

The First Ohioans
Ohio’s first human inhabitants left behind traces of their quest for food, shelter and spiritual fulfillment. Ancient burial mounds dating back to 800 B.C. are the hallmark of Ohio’s prehistoric woodland Indian cultures, the Adena and Hopewell. During the 1700s, Ohio was home to several major Native American tribes who established their own bustling towns and trade networks. Relics of their lives have been found in rock shelters and habitation sites, and scattered in the soil beneath village sites and hunting camps. Many of today’s state parks were once Indian hunting grounds. Pioneers also left their mark on the wild Ohio frontier. They aggressively cleared the primeval forests to establish farms, build cabins and found villages. Nearby streams were straddled with grist mills where corn and wheat were ground into flour. Some of these structures still stand in our state parks, and serve as reminders of frontier craftsmanship and the hardships of frontier life.
Ohioans needed a reliable transportation system to take their flour and farm products to eastern markets and bolster the fledgling economy. By the 1830s, work had begun to link the Ohio River and Lake Erie via the Ohio & Erie Canal, the Miami & Erie Canal, and the Sandy & Beaver Canal. Locks and dams were also constructed along the mighty Muskingum River to improve navigation from Marietta to Coshocton and connect with the Ohio & Erie Canal. Reservoirs dug by hand to supply water for the canals became public parks after the canals were abandoned, and were among the first areas to be designated as Ohio State Parks in 1949. Remnants of the canal channels and locks still exist at some locations. The Muskingum River locks and dams have been well maintained and are still hand-operated like they were in 1841.

The discovery of high-quality iron ore in southeast Ohio sparked a thriving new industry. By the middle of the nineteenth century, Ohio was the nation’s second largest producer of iron. As stone blast furnaces were erected to smelt the ore, local forests were chopped down to provide charcoal for the furnaces. Weathered skeletons of these furnaces have grown cold, but still stand amid the restored forests in a few of our state parks.

Confederate General John Hunt Morgan brought the War between the States to Ohio’s doorstep in 1863 when he dashed across the state in the longest raid of the Civil War. While Morgan’s Raid was the talk of the town, many Ohioans kept their role in the Civil War a closely guarded secret. Compassionate families secretly hosted runaway slaves and helped them escape along the Underground Railroad to freedom. Morgan passed through several areas that are today’s state parks, and the vast network of trails that comprised the Underground Railroad traverse state park areas.

At the turn of the twentieth century brought prosperity to Ohio and Ohioans as cities grew, industries thrived, and agriculture shifted from subsistence for families to commercial ventures. With more leisure time, Ohioans began to seek out recreational opportunities in the outdoors. Lakeside resorts were developed on the shores of the canal feeder lakes, which had taken on new life as public parks, and community amusement parks were built along electric railway lines to boost weekend business. The canal feeder lakes were among the first state parks when the Ohio State Park system was first established. A few reminders of the former amusement parks still exist at some state parks.

Fabulous homes on sprawling estates and a hunting lodge frequented by a former U.S. president are now part of the state park system. Park visitors can tour the furnished manor house at Quail Hollow, built by the enterprising industrialist Harry Bartlett Stewart in 1914, and Malabar Farm, the former home of world-famous author and conservationist Louis Bromfield, in the 1940s. Guests can spend the night in Punderson Manor, a resort hotel that was initiated by a wealthy businessman in 1929, and at the Harding Cabin, built in 1918 by the U.S. Attorney General serving under President Warren G. Harding, who hailed from Ohio.

For the centuries, an amazing cast of characters has passed through the areas that are today’s state parks. Although little evidence of their travels remain, their stories have lived on for generations. Frontier legend Simon Kenton and Shawnee Chief Tecumseh shared the territory near Buck Creek. The Shawnee Chief Blue Jacket called the area near Independence Dam his home. Johnny Appleseed is closely associated with the Mohican area. One of the most tragic frontier figures, Chief Logan, was undone by the murder of his family at their hunting camp near Beaver Creek, and he gave his moving speech “Who is there to mourn for Logan…” under the shade of the Logan Elm, near Scioto Trail. The renegade Simon Girty established “Girty’s Town” near today’s Grand Lake St. Marys, and the influential French fur trader, Peter Loramie, set up his trading post near modern-day Lake Loramie. At Barkcamp, a stone inscribed by frontier scout Louis Wetzel in 1784 claims to mark the site where he killed two Indians. The infamous modern-day gangster Pretty Boy Floyd met his fate near Beaver Creek, where an historical marker tells the tale. Read about these and other historic legends and renegades in Ohio State Parks magazine.

Fossils and Glacial Features

Must See - Fossil hunting at Hueston Woods: The ancient Cincinnati Arch bedrock formation tilted and is exposed here, giving easy access to the fossil-studded limestone. The fossil collection area at Hueston Woods is located near the Quarry Picnic Area.

More to See - Covian Lake, East Fork and Stonelick also offer excellent fossil hunting. At Caesar Creek the best hunting is in the spillway of the dam; a permit from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers office is required. Check with the park office at the other locations before collecting.

Must See - Kelleys Island glacial grooves: This is one of the world’s finest examples of grooves etched in solid rock by glaciers.

More to See - Less dramatic glacial grooves can also be seen at South Bass Island and East Harbor.

The First Ohioans
Native American History

Must See - Rock House at Hocking Hills: This geologic wonder provided ready-made shelter. Natural crevices in the rock were used to bake bread, and troughs were cut in the floor to capture and hold rainwater.

More to See - Ash Cave, also at Hocking Hills, is named for the deep layers of ash from ancient fires lining the cave floor. Chief Logan is believed to have taken advantage of the amazing acoustics of this huge recess cave, and given orations to hundreds of Indians here.

Must See - Fort Ancient earthworks off the Little Miami Scenic Trail: The Hopewell Indians constructed earthen walls and mounds here. This Ohio Historical Society site features a museum.

More to See - Indian mounds dot the Ohio countryside, and are part of the landscape at Caesar Creek, Delaware, East Fork, Indian Lake and Sycamore. While staying at Shawnee, plan a visit to Serpent Mound, one of the finest effigy mounds in the U.S. Serpent Mound is an Ohio Historical Society site.

Ohio's Pioneer Past

Must See - The Pioneer Village at Beaver Creek: Authentic log buildings include a cabin, chapel, trading post, schoolhouse and blacksmith’s shop, along with Gaston’s Mill. The village is open on weekends during the summer months.

More to See - The Caesar Creek Pioneer Village features nearly a dozen Ohio-built log houses dating back to the late 1700s that have been moved to the site and reconstructed by volunteers.

An impressive selection of antique tools and farm equipment is on display in the antique barn at Barkcamp. The Pioneer Farm at Hueston Woods features an historic farm house and barn of 1840s-vintage, equipped with period furnishings and farm implements.

Tar Hollow’s general store is an historic log house that was move from nearby Great Seal. The Cline Log House, originally built in the 1860s, was relocated to Mohican to serve as the park’s nature center.
More to See - Muskingum River Parkway:
The hand-operated, 1840s-vintage locks and dams along the Muskingum River comprise the nation’s only remaining system of historic locks and dams. The Muskingum River Parkway has been designated as a National Historic Civil Engineering Landmark, and is on the National Register of Historic Places.

More to See - Lusk’s Lock at Beaver Creek is a well-prepared example of the locks and dams of the historic Sandy & Beaver Canal. Portions of the historic Miami & Erie Canal channels and tow paths are still visible in and around Grand Lake St. Marys, Indian Lake, Lake Loramie, and Mary Jane Thurston. At Independence Dam, an historic lock from the Miami & Erie Canal has been restored. Buckeye Lake is steeped in the history of the Ohio & Erie Canal, which is the subject of historical markers at the park and neighboring communities of Buckeye Lake and Millersport, along with exhibits at the nearby Greater Buckeye Lake Historical Society Museum.

Must See - Marblehead Lighthouse: The oldest lighthouse in continuous operation on the Great Lakes has guided sailors safely along the rocky shores of Marblehead Peninsula since 1822. Lighthouse tours are offered on weekdays and select Saturdays during the summer months. The museum in the adjacent Keeper’s House is open during the tours.

Commerse

Must See - The Old Grist Mill at Mohican:
The 1831 mill was moved to its present location on Pine Run in the 1970s, and renovated by volunteers. Tours and demonstrations are offered on most summer weekends.

More to See - Gaston’s Mill at Beaver Creek: This well-preserved water-powered mill was built on this site along Little Beaver Creek in 1830. Tours are offered on weekends through the summer, and demonstrations are offered occasionally.

More to See - Stockport Mill along the Muskingum River Parkway and Clifton Mill, near John Bryan, have been restored and converted to privately-operated tourist attractions.

Shaping a State

Must See - Great Seal: The rolling landscape of Great Seal serves as the inspiration for the scenic valley depicted in the Great Seal of the State of Ohio.

Must See - On South Bass Island, the Perry’s Victory and International Peace Memorial commemorates the extraordinary naval battle that turned the tide of the War of 1812. The National Park Service operates the visitor center and offers tours of the monument.

More to See - At Alum Creek, a plaque in the park’s campground marks the site known as Fort Cheshire where a blockhouse was constructed to provide a secure shelter for local settlers during the War of 1812.

More to See - Historical Society sites near Mary Jane Thurston include a replica of Fort Meigs, and a monument commemorating the Battle of Fallen Timbers. Fort Meigs offers a museum featuring exhibits of the War of 1812.

An historical marker along the Muskingum River Parkway at Rokeby shows where Confederate General John Hunt Morgan and his cavalry crossed the Muskingum River on their raid across 20 Ohio counties. Morgan’s Raid marked the northern-most point ever reached by Confederate forces during the Civil War.

At Pike Lake, a solitary headstone marks the grave of an unidentified Union soldier who was found mortally wounded in a nearby farm field and buried at the site.

At Alum Creek, an historical marker celebrates a station on the Underground Railroad, and an historical community of freed slaves who settled in the area.

At Home in Ohio

Historic Homes

Must See - The “Big House” at Malabar Farm: The house has been preserved just as Louis Bromfield and his family left it in 1956. Tours are offered year-round.

Must See - The H.B. Stewart Manor House at Quail Hollow: The Manor features period furnishings and gardens reminiscent of the home’s original landscaping. Tours are offered weekly in the summer and fall, and during special events.

More to See - The Kennedy Stone House at Salt Fork was built in 1837 by David B. Kennedy, with large blocks of beautiful sandstone that was locally quarried. The home has been restored and furnished by volunteers and is listed in the National Register of Historic Places.

The Crabill House at Buck Creek is the restored home of one of the area’s early settlers, David Crabill. Built in the early 1820s, the brick home is listed on the National Register of Historic Places and is operated by the Clark County Historical Society.

Guest rooms at the Punderson Manor House are lavishly decorated to complement the elegant Tudor-style building. The dining room is open to all park visitors. The Harding Cabin at Deer Creek offers unique accommodations for business meetings or overnight stays in this well-appointed sportsman’s retreat of an earlier era.

Leisure Pursuits

Must See - Buckeye Lake Amusement Park: Memorabilia from the Buckeye Lake Amusement Park is on display at the Buckeye Lake Historical Society Museum. An interpretive sign and historical marker at the North Shore Launch Ramp are located alongside the only remaining structure from the amusement park, a decorative fountain that served as the centerpiece of the bustling midway.

More to See - An historical marker at Indian Lake reminds about the old Sandy Beach Amusement Park, dubbed “Ohio’s Million Dollar Playground.” The steel arch bridge that spans the Lakeview Harbor is the only remaining structure from the park. At Cleveland Lakefront, old lampposts, park benches and the grand entrance gate are vestiges of the historic Euclid Beach Amusement Park.
